Vino Bianco

βιαγκο – For purely legal reasons the wine cannot be named after its varietal. One of the synonyms for that grape is Greco Novarese and locally it is referred to as Greco Bianco (It is not that grape though so it cannot be called that either). Playful use of the Greek alphabet makes the name appear to bianco yet, like a harlequin, the truth can be spoken behind this foolish mask.

Winemaking Notes

Ripe and healthy grapes are the absolute basis for any quality wine. Hand harvested clusters are placed whole and intact in a vertical Champagne press. This results in a clean must, this avoids vegetal or green notes, which is neither treated or cooled allowing the wine to develop naturally. There is no racking or stirring of the lees until bottling. Very little sulfur is used (40mg / l). Vinification is performed in three separate vessels, cement, amphora magazine, and acacia barrel and tested after six months before the final blending and bottling.

Le Piane began, in a way, in 1988 when Christoph Kunzli and Alexander Tolf met Antonio Cerri. At that time Antonio was more than eighty years old and one of the last wine growers to produce and cellar the typical Boca wine. Following a tasting of Cerri's wines, Christoph and Alexander decided Boca was where they wanted to farm and make wine. They began working with Antonio to make Boca. Without heirs interested in taking over his life's work, they convinced him they would honor his way of making wine and continue his tradition. They purchased his vineyards, the barrels (still full), a nice archive of library vintages, and a small broken-down building right in the middle of the vineyards. They slowly acquired and cleared more small plots of land and like a puzzle the property soon grew into today's estate. Le Piane still maintains the vineyards in the traditional way and makes wine without the use of modern technology. These wines speak the language of time gone by.
